

North Dakota State Library Talking Books Department

An Introduction to Braille and Audio Recording Download (BARD).

North Dakota State Library Talking Books Department

The Braille and Audio Recoding Download or BARD was developed by the National Library Service for the Blind and Physically Handicapped to allow eligible users to download and read digital books and magazines. This service is free to all North Dakotan Talking Books patrons who are using the digital Talking Books machine.

You can use a flash-drive and your own computer

North Dakota State Library Talking Books Department

While you can receive digital books and magazines sent from the North Dakota State Library Talking Books department, BARD provides users the freedom to download their own books or magazines.

North Dakota State Library Talking Books Department

For example, if you ran out of books and you had nothing to read over the weekend, with BARD, you can download a digital talking book or two and supplement what you are receiving from the State Library.

Or, You found out about a book and wanted to read it right away. Rather than requesting it from the Talking Books department, you could download it from BARD and start reading it.

You can also download magazines and use the Talking Books department for ordering books. That way, you can control when you get current issues of magazines rather than waiting for them to be shipped out.

North Dakota State Library Talking Books Department

There are over 27,000 digital books and 50 digital magazines to choose from.

You can download digital books and magazines onto any flash-drive; however, you can only listen to the books on a talking book machine or an NLS compatible digital device.

You can also purchase a blank cartridge and USB cord. For more information on how to purchase a blank cartridge and USB cord, please contact the Talking Books Department at 1-800-843-9948.

North Dakota State Library Talking Books Department

Even if you do not have your own computer, a patron of the Talking Books program can still sign up for BARD and have a family member, a friend, or caregiver help you download a book or magazine.

North Dakota State Library Talking Books Department

A library can sign up to be a BARD demonstration site. As a BARD demonstration site, a library can offer training to Talking Books patrons in their community on how to download books and magazines from BARD and assist your patrons with the application for BARD.

